The Power Cut

1 The storm knocked the power out just as Dad was serving dinner.
2 One moment the kitchen was bright and humming; the next, everything went black.
3 "Brilliant," groaned my brother Leo, dropping his fork with a clatter.
4 But Mum only laughed and began hunting in the cupboard for candles.
5 Soon a dozen little flames flickered along the table, throwing giant shadows up the walls.
6 The fridge had stopped its steady buzz, and the whole house felt strangely still.
7 Outside, the wind hurled rain against the windows like handfuls of gravel.
8 We ate our cold dinner huddled together, and somehow it tasted better than usual.
9 Leo forgot to complain. Instead he began telling a ghost story in a low, spooky voice.
10 Mum found an old board game at the back of a drawer, its box soft with age.
11 We played by candlelight for hours, laughing until our sides ached.
12 Dad said it reminded him of when he was a boy, before phones and screens.
13 For once, nobody reached for a tablet or glanced at a glowing screen.
14 When the lights finally buzzed back on, we all groaned in disappointment.
15 The ordinary brightness suddenly seemed harsh and rather dull.
16 Leo said, quietly, that it had been the best evening in ages.
17 Mum smiled and blew out the last of the candles, one careful breath at a time.
18 Sometimes, it turns out, the best nights are the ones you never planned.
